

Renovating the Farm House

Taking great care to keep the original exterior, architectural details and character intact, the Farm House will be made into an energy efficient, comfortable lodge for interns and volunteers. The oldest building on site, it served as the Highlander office for many years.

Making all our facilities energy efficient and more durable for the long haul

- Insulation, windows and siding will be upgraded.
- High efficiency heating and cooling systems will replace aging units.
- More comfortable, higher quality beds and mattresses will be installed.

Creating a maintenance endowment

To ensure that Highlander participants can continue to address their work in safe, comfortable and welcoming spaces, we will create a maintenance endowment. At last we can:

- Institute energy efficiency upgrades
- Take advantage of emerging green technologies
- Ensure a proactive repair and maintenance program
- Keep small problems from becoming larger and more costly

Charles Horton and Sam Clark working on renovation of the Myles Horton House, 2004

Building the North-South Youth Camp in Blount County, Tennessee, in the 1960's.

